3/19/18

I just feel really bad and sick about the whole conversation. I was holding back tears the entire time and just wanted to run away and cry. I felt like I couldn't get out of there fast enough. As hard as I always am on myself I really do not feel that I have done anything to lead him or to deserve this. I also think that if what he is saying is true then I don't want to say anything else to hurt his feelings. I don't want to hurt anyone and am really sensitive to this right now. It feels like everything he is saying is a repeat of something I have gone thru before that hurts me so bad and feels so familiar. It is very painful.

I have cried all weekend and just can't seem to shake the fact that I am in a hopeless situation. I am also angry and scared now that he has explained that he has spoken to a "friend" about me. He states that he has let her read my text messages and emails etc and that she wants to meet me so that she can let me know what a wonderful relationship I am missing out on. It seems overwhelming and scary that several people now know or know enough that something isn't right in what is going on.

It is Monday and I am still very down. I can't describe how or why I feel the way I do. I feel like I am going to have to give up my wonderful job and the only career I have ever known. I feel like I have to do this because I need to move and be on offense. My reputation could be compromised, my job, my family, my marriage. I do not want to hurt anyone
