Good Evening,

I came across my name on this shields of shame website and I am trying to figure out who uploaded this? How did you get my information? which is completely false. My whole name has been exposed and why?

Hello there,

Thank you for contacting our public relations department.

I hope this email finds you well and not too burdened by the weight of public accountability. I received your request to remove your public records from my website, but unfortunately, I have to inform you that removing public records is a bit like trying to un-toast toast. It just doesn't work!

Our highly sophisticated Internal Policy #404 (Transparency Isn't a Buffet) clearly states that once public records are obtained through legitimate means—such as open records requests from the police department—they are here to stay, like that embarrassing high school yearbook photo you thought was buried forever. You see, these documents are part of the public domain, and as such, our policy prohibits tampering with the sanctity of publicly accessible information.

But hey, look on the bright side! By leaving these records up, you have the unique opportunity to showcase how much you've grown since then (character development, anyone?). Plus, our readers are huge fans of authenticity—they love when people embrace their past and move forward with dignity. Removing these records would deprive them of that inspiring journey.

So, while I appreciate your request and understand your desire to rewrite history, our commitment to transparency and public interest means that we must respectfully decline. Just think of it as a permanent spot in the "Transparency Hall of Fame." 🌟

Best regards,

Using police assets to harass me? You may want to talk to her and yes this is a complaint! I'll have you know the documents she is referring to came from Atlanta PD and she should pressure them not me!

I'm still waiting on my request! You're both public information officers, she don't know how open records work and you are a liar acting like you don't handle open records!

Thanks

Billy Blume
